The goal of this K23 proposal is to provide the applicant with the training necessary to become an independent investigator of eating disorder psychopathology and prevention, using treatment- development research to inform the treatment of eating disorders. The applicant will learn (1) appropriate methods to test treatment development hypotheses, and (2) clinical issues in treatment-development research. The training will be facilitated by this mentored research project, which will examine the appropriateness of a potential new treatment for bulimia nervosa (BN), cue exposure in vivo (CEIVD), for this disorder, and by the substantial expertise of her mentors and consultants. The research goal is to empirically test the therapeutic rationale for a new intervention for bulimia nervosa, CEIVD, a highly-brief treatment with the potential to generalize to other eating disorders. The specific aims of this project are to test the treatment-development hypothesis that exposure to eating-related stimuli will reduce eating disorder psychopathology; and to test the hypothesis that treatment-relevant expectancies will moderate the effects of exposure in vivo to eating-related stimuli. The proposed research is innovative because it will take an integrated approach to test the conceptual basis of an innovative and potentially highly cost-effective treatment of bulimia nervosa, while developing a sound framework to test more generalization to other eating disorders. The proposed research will also provide a detailed training plan to complement the expertise of the applicant's mentors and consultants. 82138339de
