following URL:Correlation of dose, route and duration of perioperative corticosteroid administration with postoperative morbidity in dogs. An experiment was conducted to determine the relationship between postoperative morbidity in dogs and dose, route, and duration of perioperative corticosteroid administration. Data on postoperative morbidity were obtained from 192 dogs divided into three groups according to three perioperative administration regimens: group 1, methylprednisolone (1 mg/kg IV, q6 hours for 3 days) (n = 48); group 2, methylprednisolone (1 mg/kg IV, q8 hours for 3 days) (n = 48); and group 3, prednisone (1 mg/kg PO, daily for 3 days) (n = 96). Data from dogs in the first two groups were combined and compared with data from dogs in the third group. Postoperative outcome was assessed by determination of a composite of overall health status, neurologic and cardiopulmonary variables during the first postoperative week. Although postoperative morbidity occurred in most dogs receiving corticosteroids, there was no significant correlation between severity of any single variable and severity of overall health status or mortality.Q: Why is this SQL query
