Here's the simplified code: function jsFunction(e) { console.log(e); } Click me! The function doesn't work, but I still want to be able to call the jsFunction to run the jsFunction. A: A few things going on here. You can't execute JavaScript like that. A button is always going to cause a postback, sending your request to the server and rendering a response. So it's going to create a fresh DOM and then start the process over again. This is fine for simple page refreshes,
