have, like the captains of industry, expectedly witnessed a flourishing industry with the creation of the "textbook market." These publishers today's era of globalization. India is becoming increasingly interdependent. This 'interdependence' is seen as a threat to national sovereignty. The increasing influence of. international companies over 'domestic' industries and civil service has fueled a domestic debate. The central thrust of this debate is whether India should maintain sovereign policy and focus on its own socio-economic development. Following the establishment of the Republic of India in 1950, despite heavy foreign aid.

India became a self-sufficient power. However, in the subsequent decades, this dependence on foreign aid became apparent, mostly through international loans. The foreign debt of the mid-80s was approximately US$ 108 billion. However, India's high rates of economic growth (one of the highest in the world) and its impressive record on trade (the largest in the world), coupled with its huge population, have enabled it to repay its external debt successfully. Therefore, it can be stated that India has succeeded in maintaining sovereign policy of developing its own industries and civil services.
