Niederberger, 52, of Quincy, hold a candlelight vigil in front of his family's home in Quincy for their son, who was killed in the Boston Marathon on Monday. By Eliza CollinsBoston Globe April 18, 2013 Quincy resident Andrew Niederberger was enjoying a day off from his job when the most taxing part of his life began. He began to run the Boston Marathon, the world's oldest and largest marathon, but his run turned into a struggle when he was struck by a car at the 23 mile mark. Boston Marathon officials say Niederberger was a victim of human trafficking. The driver who struck him has not been charged in connection with the crash, which left the 52-year-old Niederberger a quadriplegic and the victim of organ theft by unknown assailants. Boston Marathon officials are calling Niederberger's death the first ever fatality in the history of the race, reports the Boston Globe. He'd been participating in his second Boston Marathon since 2006. Niederberger's father, who ran in the marathon himself in 1974 at the age of 23, 3da54e8ca3
