I have a property in my viewmodel that I would like to update when a button in the view is clicked. I need to do this because the property in my viewmodel is an instance property of a base viewmodel. I have tried the following: event handler in the view as shown below. The issue is that the button click event does not update the property in my viewmodel. Add New Trigger as shown below but as I suspected, the property on the button is firing an event to update the property in the viewmodel before the UI has had a chance to process it. Any suggestions how to approach this? A: When you bind a button to a command you specify which ViewModel to call the command on. So in your case it would be the CommandParameter is the ViewModel property that you are binding to. This will ensure that the property you are binding to is updated before the button binding will be called. BELGRADE (Reuters) - Thousands of people thronged Serbia's capital
