Technical Field The invention relates to a method and apparatus for vibrating an earth formation to stimulate production of hydrocarbons therefrom. More particularly, the invention relates to a method and apparatus for injecting vibrational energy into an earth formation through a borehole in a near-vertical wellbore adjacent to a subterranean reservoir to stimulate the reservoir. 2. Background Information The technique of stimulating production of hydrocarbons from a subterranean reservoir by imparting acoustic energy into the reservoir is well known in the art. The acoustic energy is typically generated by a vibrating source that has a broad bandwidth of operation, either acoustic or seismic. In instances where the reservoir is a body of water or brine, the vibrational energy imparted to the reservoir will cause the formation rocks to vibrate. Such vibrational energy is known to cause the formation to fracture, fracture clean, and/or mix. The reservoir may be located in any one of a number of geologic strata. The vibrational energy is thus imparted into the reservoir through one or more wellbores that intersect the reservoir. In one form of such a system, the reservoir comprises a borehole located in
