Alignment-based dose calculation for proton scanning pencil beams using the beamline uncollimated model. The aim of this work was to develop a simple and efficient alignment-based method for using a pencil beam to prescribe the dose distribution to a scanning proton beam. Our approach was to use a pencil beam model with a simple guide structure in order to guide the proton beam in the simulation. The pencil beam was aligned with the gantry rotation axis so as to match a plane in water, which was defined as the proton beamline uncollimated model. The dose distribution prescribed by the pencil beam was then used to generate proton beam positions. The pencil beam dose distribution was created from a multileaf collimator (MLC) motion prescribed by the leaf tip positions as the MLC leaves were moving in a predefined way. In order to evaluate the performance of our proposed method, the dose distributions were then compared with the 2D dose distributions generated from a measured spot-scanned proton beam and with the pencil beam dose calculations from the proton radiotherapy dose planning system (PROPS). The beam quality correction factors, monitor units, and scanned volumes of dose distributions generated from a pencil beam are in good agreement with the measured and calculated values from PROPS. Our proposed alignment-based method can be used to generate accurate proton spot-scanned beamlet-by-beamlet dose distributions.

Q: Why do these two Java programs both print the same garbage value? Why does the output value of the following Java code differ from that of the following Java code? On my machine the first outputs `'\0'` and the second outputs the garbage value at `(0xFFFFFFFF,0xFFFFFFFF)`.

int main(void) { char myArray[] = { 'a','b','c','d','\0' }; System.out.println("These are the contents of myArray: " + myArray); return 0;
