I do hope that you are joking. How would you log into a system, without knowing the password? When you share some folders on a network, then your shared folders are always visible in all computers. If you want to share your private files, then the only way is using special encryption and decryption methods. You can use shared folders for this, that are the folder which you want to be visible in other computers. Have you ever thought of something quite new, when you were writing your themes? ## What's New In Double Password?

>> Scans the targeted computer and finds its key loggers and other spyware >> Makes a copy of your log-in password and stores it in special file >> Encrypts this file with a strong algorithm, uses 128 bit keys >> Removes the password from the memory, so that no one but you can use the computer >> Protects the whole operating system with encryption! Each user has its own security token >> Protects your private information (keystrokes, passwords, passwords to your online accounts) >> Use your USB Flash Drive to safely keep your security token for every PC you own We called it "Double Passwords" in a way, cause it's like it can become a backup of your current password(s) and be used as your new(s) password(s). It opens a log file of the current keystrokes of all users, but when you close it, it doesn't wipe it's temporary data (like in other log programs). The program is able to unlock your locked files (even if you close the application), so you can make a copy of any file from the locked directories. The program is very easy to use, but it has not much features, so you can't do much with it. We use different users that own their own PCs. Then, the applications are shared a lot. But the software has some problems: - It doesn't work in a multi-user environment (it detects each user's log in and shows its own password) - A feature that exists in another log program is a facility to unlock any locked directory - The all in one-program
