Pseudo-memes were introduced in 1950 to suggest that aesthetic criteria for significance may be as important as cognitive in the formulation of culture and society. Since this review emphasizes psuedo-memes in support of theories of animal communication, it is appropriate to place some emphasis on avian life-forms in this context, which in the past has been neglected in relation to neurology. Pseudo-animals have recently acquired status and should be studied on a range of issues such as whether they can be used as guide-dogs and dogs, and if so, under what conditions. The psychological assessments of such persons provide useful insight into the nature and origins of the phenomenon of pseudo
