Here is a toy example of what I'm trying to do. #!/usr/bin/env python import collections import numpy as np def fact_test(int_results): print 'factorial calculation for:', int_results[0], 'is:', map(factorial, int_results[1:]) def factorial(num): return num * factorial(num-1) int_results = [1, 2] fact_test(int_results) but all I get back is None. What am I doing wrong? A: map() applies the function you provide to the elements of the iterable. In your case it is applied to a list (iterable of the form [1, 2], not a single number). However, you are then applying the function factorial to it, which returns None. Try this: def fact_test(int_results): print 'factorial calculation for:', int_results[0], 'is:', map(factorial, int_results[1:]) print 'factorial calculation for:', 1, 'is:', map(factorial, [1]) Cryptocurrency exchange Gate.io just announced that they have launched trading on a new stablecoin called "Gatecoin Stablecoin".
