Although there has been a well-known relationship between pancreatitis and carcinoma of the pancreas, the characteristics of acute pancreatitis in relation to pancreatic cancer are still not clearly defined. The aim of this study was to examine the characteristics of acute pancreatitis in patients with pancreatic cancer and the prognosis of pancreatic cancer and acute pancreatitis. The medical records of 557 patients with pancreatic carcinoma were reviewed, and those of 11 patients who presented with both acute pancreatitis and pancreatic carcinoma were also selected. In 11 patients with pancreatic carcinoma and acute pancreatitis, pancreatitis was found at the time of diagnosis in 8 patients, and chronic pancreatitis developed in 3 patients without acute pancreatitis. However, other pre-existing diseases, such as diabetes mellitus and hyperlipidemia, were frequently found. In addition, 9 of the 11 patients had obstructive jaundice, and 4 patients had peritoneal dissemination of the primary lesion. Three patients died within 1 month and 3 others after curative resection of their pancreatic carcinoma. These results suggest that the development of acute pancreatitis in patients with pancreatic cancer is closely associated with the progression of chronic pancreatitis as well as with jaundice, peritoneal dissemination, and poor prognosis. Therefore, when acute pancreatitis is diagnosed in a patient with pancreatic carcinoma, it is important to closely observe the progression of chronic pancreatitis.Older, less wealthy, more rural and rural whites in the U.S. have larger shares of party power—and voters have become more partisan by political ideology. Two new phenothiazine-squaraine chromophores, P1 and P2, were synthesized and their optical properties were studied. Theoretical calculations of the dipole moments and electronic excited states (S0-S2) were performed. The new molecules showed interesting photoluminescence properties that were investigated by steady-state fluorescence spectroscopy and by time-resolved photo-induced
