I have an element on a page that is supposed to load an image once it's visible to the user. I use the Puppeteer ChromeHeadless API. While the image is downloading, Puppeteer waits until it's ready before continuing on with my test. Is there a way to know when it's ready? I've tried using code like this: element.waitForNavigation({ waitUntil: 'networkidle0', selector: "img.large" }) element.on('load', () => console.log(this.element.getAttribute('src')); but this seems to fail when the image is generated by an ajax call. Perhaps this has something to do with the img.large tag not having any width and height set? How do I wait for the ajax-generated image to have loaded in Puppeteer? A: For asynchronous operations like image loading, the Puppeteer API provides a headless waitUntil: "networkidle0" option. This guarantees that the network is idle for a specified amount of time before continuing. So, assuming the image is being loaded using the async attribute: async element.waitForNavigation({ waitUntil: "networkidle0" }) element.on('load', () => console.log(this.element.getAttribute('src')): Bear in mind that if the image is being loaded from a remote host, it will continue rendering the page until the image is loaded. Q: White-box testing I'm very new to white box testing and have decided to use Selenium-WebDriver to test my web application. I know that white-box testing includes two main 0cc13bf012
