"Contemplative mode of thought": Attention allocation and identity regulation in undergraduate psychology. This study examines the attention allocation and identity regulation strategies in undergraduate psychology students during a semester-long teaching activity. The 1-hour teaching session is cast as a dialogues with past and present psychology educators. Teachers discuss the challenges and rewards of teaching with students and their personal preoccupations with psychology education and their professional identity development. Previously unnoticed attentional strategies were identified in the transcripts. Specifically, teachers focus comments and mentoring practices on subtle qualities of attention, such as presence, attentiveness to needs, and attentiveness to body-based signals. Students respond to these quality attentional signals, engaging in identity regulation processes that are completed in different contexts. This attentional sampling serves as a heuristic for social identity formation in psychology education.Q: Adding or updating to a database from ASP.NET MVC I'd like to know how to add or update data from a model to a database from within an ASP.NET MVC application. I've got a db up and running in Visual Studio. I've got a 'model' that has (amongst other things) a 'table' with various data in it. The model is referenced by an ASP.NET MVC controller and I need to do something like add a new user to the model and then query the db and check if the user exists and update the table, if it exists, if it doesn't then add it. Is this possible and how? Many thanks A: The basics would be something like this public class MVC { public void AddUser(string userName, string password) { // add to whatever database you have setup for users using (SqlConnection con = new SqlConnection("...")) { using (SqlCommand cmd = new SqlCommand("INSERT INTO UserTable (Name, Password)

VALUES (@userName, @password)", con)) { cmd.CommandType = CommandType.Text; cmd.Parameters.AddWithValue("@userName", userName); cmd.Parameters.Add

Refreshed the descriptionOpinion: Our Housing Market Fears Are All Too Real Chat with us in Facebook Messenger. Find out what's happening in the world as it unfolds. (CNN)I am not normally one to offer an opinion about home sales and the housing market. So I am a bit surprised that I have been seeing signs pointing to a possible downturn in our local housing market. I have been following a program called Homes Under Contract in Newport News, Virginia, that measures pending home sales. It works by comparing the total number of homes listed for sale in Newport News with the total number sold. When sales are higher than listings, you get a 'hot' market. When sales are lower than listings, you get 'cold.' It hasn't been hot for quite a while in Newport News. Then in early November, the market began to cool. New listings were low while pending sales were even lower. But then the December numbers came out. Sales were below the November numbers, but pending sales were up, and almost as big as November sales. This month, December sales were better than November and actually beat all-year numbers. The January numbers come out on Wednesday. Pending sales are not for homes that have sold recently. They are for homes that are still listed. So you have to make a judgment about whether this is a sign of a correction, or just another normal cycle. The two slowest years in the past 40 years were 2004 and 2008. People were pulling money out of their home equity to pay for the recent financial collapse, which caused home sales and prices to fall. Since then, their homes are probably worth more than they sold
