treatment of traumatic total inguinal hernias in children. [Apropos of 50 cases]. The authors report a series of 50 traumatic total inguinal hernias in children observed over the last 20 years. The diagnosis of an inguinal hernia was established in 37 cases (74%) at the first exploratory laparotomy and the repair of the defect was carried out in the same operation in 45 cases. This procedure represents a simple and effective way of dealing with this unusual complication of a well-known surgical emergency. The present invention relates to an image forming apparatus which forms an image on a recording medium such as a sheet by the use of an electrophotographic method, a printing method, a typewriting method, or the like. In the field of image forming apparatuses such as an electrophotographic apparatus or a printing apparatus, there is a known technique of controlling and protecting the apparatus based on abnormal conditions thereof. As a technique of control and protection of an apparatus, for example, there is known a technique of detecting an abnormal condition of a part of a mechanism and sending a control signal to a driving section of the part to stop a rotation of the part, thereby stopping a rotation of the whole apparatus. However, in the conventional technique, control of the driving section is performed by a microcomputer. Accordingly, in the case of a technique of stopping a rotation of a part by detecting an abnormal condition of the part, a problem arises in that much time is required for an abnormal condition detection and controlling. Gene expression pattern during the progression of hepatic fibrosis in the rat. Several lines of evidence suggest that macrophages are critical to the initiation and progression of liver fibrosis. The production of transforming growth factor beta1 (TGF-beta1) by macrophages is believed to play an important role in hepatic fibrosis. The objectives of this study were to determine whether macrophages play an
