There is a guide here: Do you have the right stuff? - lawrence The candidate I am interviewing with is a C++ programmer, but most of his programming experience is in Java/Ruby. I've got a pretty basic understanding of C++ and am coming to him asking about the basic concepts of the language - pointers, data structures, design patterns, etc. I'm hoping that, given his background, he can help me develop my own mental picture of the language, but I'm not holding my breath...I was wondering if anyone had any tips for getting an interview question like this across? ===== noodle re: pointers -- first, play it up as him giving you a 'newbie' tour. second, don't try to get technical or be too detailed. use phrases like "I'm seeing pointers everywhere", "I've come across pointers before, but can you clarify a few things for me?", "How might you use pointers in a real world scenario?", "How might you implement some basic pointers in C/C++?" re: data structures -- same reasoning as above. try to make them fun, make them short, make them interesting. re: design patterns -- if you can get him to start talking about design patterns, that's best. otherwise, go for "did you find a good resource on design patterns and
