into memory as an array? I would like to read through a file that is around 20mb in size and make a new array of lines from it for every line. If I try to read the entire file to memory before I get to a line, it takes too long (since it is 200mb) and that is why I was wondering if there is a better way to do this. Thanks A: Since you are reading it line by line, you might just as well create an array of the lines and reuse that for every line you read. Even better, make the lines themselves the array. A: Yes - your approach is "correct" for the purpose of your question. Your question is somewhat rhetorical, but in the event that you want to implement that exact approach you are asking about, here are a few tips to speed it up: As Eric Meyer mentioned, it's faster to allocate an array of strings than it
