Isorropia is built to level the skills of players by auto-balancing the power of your characters. This allows players of different skill levels to have a fair chance at a competitive multiplayer fighting game. Each player owns a planet. Units can be built in the player's planet. Units can go to the enemy planet. The goal is to build the biggest fighting force before the opponent does. Interface: The game is designed for quick-fire, fast-paced strategy fights, but the UI is designed to be clear, easy to learn and not overwhelming. The Crimson Colosseum is a cluster of 30 large spherical structures located in Mojave Desert, California. There are four Colosseums spread over an area of about in the middle part of the Mojave Desert in San Bernardino County. Each site is on top of its own hill, but each hill is nearly adjacent to the next site. The nearest residence is about away from the site. The sites contain innumerable smaller pyramids and alignments. The pyramid structures are characteristic of the O'llam (1920) pyramid type; each individual structures is unique and is named Crimson, Red, Gold, or Silver. The total monumentality and size of each site creates a coherent landscape. Each structure is divided up into distinct sectors, some of which were chosen as habitation sites and others designated as ceremonial sites. The giant mounds consist of three major phases of structures. Phase one has a height of, Phase two has a height of, and Phase three has a height of. Each phase has four to seven levels of large structures and hundreds of smaller structures. Each structure has trapezoidal sides and is of a nearly uniform size. All sites contain nearly identical chambers with niches on the ceiling. Some crypts in the structures resemble the Star of Life and the Sun and Moon pyramid at San Juan Bautista, California. The site has become a major tourist attraction in California, greatly aided by the popularity of the 1993 documentary television film Nada Más, about a Maori man who lived on the sites and requested anonymity due to the association with the horror film Craving. The site had been vandalized but was reconstructed according to the wishes of the site's former resident, Richard Holober, who lived on the site from the mid 1980s until his death in 2018. The site was featured on the Travel Channel's hit show, "Strange Destinations" in the episode "Strange Encounters." Multiple versions of the name "Crimson" Colosseum have been in use for the sites. Author and researcher David King gives several names of these, including Rake at Collisson, Irishman's Colosseum, Orange Grove, Neopewe, as well as a site he calls Red Sands Circle. Habitation site Phase I, or Richard Holober's Colosseum was formerly a habitation site. Holober lived on the site for at least eight years. During this time, Holober performed

- Our Website: - Facebook: - Twitter: - Steam: - YouTube: Credits: - Eric Ranquet for the soundtrack - Franck David for the art - Mitchell VanTine for the map - Chris for the music in the intro One evening as Saijayan was the only survivor of the village, he was giving name to the birds. Many times he had seen the stars twinkling in the sky. As the day was going on, he went to the other side of the forest and he began observing the stars again in search of the Moon's orbit. When the human world was green in the past, only a few creatures like us inhabited this world. Others still inhabited the wild. The wild and very peaceful. Legend tells of two creatures who broke the laws of the wild, who created a civilization, changing the nature of the wild. One was a female creature, beautiful and young with a rose petal-patterned body. While the other was a male of the same species, sleek and beast like, his left side was patterned with two sword-shaped stripes and a black spot on the left side of his body. They traveled far and wide, planting trees in their territories, so that it would allow a place to rest. They began creating a society, in a land where there was nothing, even though they knew of the dangers they faced. Nothing had stuck out. It was good. They had known best. The only problem was that the world became silent, tree after tree fell in the forest. Only the marmot had kept its eyes on the sky. However, it had seen that something was wrong and it let out a loud sound that reverberated through the forest. The trees were dying. Just when the human world had become aware
