Photoshop is one of many image manipulation tools you have at your disposal. There are others, such as Paint Shop Pro, GIMP, and Corel Photo-Paint. Each of these programs can be used to manipulate images to some degree. Although Photoshop has many more features than the other programs mentioned, it can be learned as a "plugin" of sorts and can be used to manipulate any file type that is supported, including bitmap and vector (PDF) images. As long as the original file is a format Photoshop supports, no matter the size, Photoshop can create a file of any size you wish. We demonstrate a variety of common tasks in Photoshop in the following sections. The majority of these methods can be used in virtually any photo editor. Adding a border to images A border adds a frame around a layer. A border can be placed around a new layer or any existing layer. To add a border, follow these steps: 1. Select the Layer Fill option from the Layers panel. You can also add a border to an existing layer by using the Layer Background Settings option on the Layers panel when the layer has an active fill. 2. Choose the type of border you want to use from the Border menu, as shown in Figure 5-2, or choose None from the Borders & Corners submenu. 3. The Border options are similar to those available in the Graphics and Layout panels. If you select None from the Borders & Corners submenu, then the Border options move to the Layers panel. Here you can set the color of the border and specify a width or height, as shown in Figure 5-2. 4. Press Enter to set the layer border properties. You don't need to press Enter to close the dialog box, however; just keep clicking the OK button to close it. Figures 5-2, 5-3, and 5-4 demonstrate the process of adding a border. Photoshop provides two ways to add a border. Although not shown in the figure, you can add a border to an existing layer or create a new layer. Adding a new layer enables you to use the Border option to create a border using a different type of stroke. Experiment with the different options to see what works best for your image. Here are some of the possible additions to borders: None: Produces no border.

Association of SRY gene and caveolin-1 gene variants with idiopathic male infertility in the Korean population. The objective of this study was to investigate the relationship between variation in SRY and CAV1 genes and male infertility in the Korean population. We examined 11 single nucleotide polymorphisms (SNPs) in SRY and CAV1 genes in 720 cases and 720 controls. We found that three SNPs in the SRY gene and one SNP in the CAV1 gene were significantly associated with male infertility. The AG genotype of rs189837 in the SRY gene was associated with male infertility [odds ratio (OR), 1.63; 95% confidence interval (CI), 1.22-2.17; p = 0.0006], and the TT genotype of rs1269468 in the CAV1 gene was associated with male infertility (OR, 2.29; 95% CI, 1.50-3.50; p = 0.0001). There was a more significant association between SRY rs189837 and CAV1 rs1269468 with low sperm counts than with oligozoospermia or azoospermia. The AG genotype of SRY rs189837 was also significantly associated with low sperm counts (p = 0.0046). The TT genotype of CAV1 rs1269468 was associated with low sperm counts (p = 0.0261). Our findings suggest that there is a relationship between SNPs in the SRY and CAV1 genes with idiopathic male infertility, especially the AG genotype of SRY rs189837 and the TT genotype of CAV1 rs1269468, in the Korean population.A reader writes: I am a male (not cis gendered) who was invited to the recent (2015) New York University Queer Voices Conference (NYUQVC). The conference was supposed to be for "the sexual and gender-nonconforming community". What was conveyed to me throughout the week was that because I was male, and because I did not identify as transgender, and had not yet begun hormone therapy, it was not appropriate for me to be there. I was told that if I did not begin hormone treatment immediately, that I would not be welcome there, and that if I did attend, I would be questioned if I had any interest in transitioning. This event was held at NYU (Perel
