Changes in pancreas beta cell mass play a pivotal role in the development of diabetes mellitus ([@B16]). Some studies have pointed out that beta cell regeneration occurs following damage of pancreatic islets ([@B17]). Previous studies have demonstrated that MvD3 increases the proliferation of beta cells \*in vitro\* and \*in vivo\* in streptozotocin-induced diabetic mice ([@B8], [@B9]). The exact mechanism underlying the beta cell proliferation is not known yet. One possible explanation is that MvD3 activates the PI3K/AKT/mTOR signaling pathway. Our data demonstrated that treatment with MvD3 induced the expression of AKT, a downstream molecule in the PI3K/AKT/mTOR signaling pathway, in INS-1 cells and in isolated islets. Furthermore, MvD3 treatment increased the activation of mTOR and its downstream phosphorylated proteins, such as S6K, and 4EBP1 in INS-1 cells, compared with the control. mTOR is a catalytic protein that forms two functionally distinct multiprotein complexes; mTORC1 is involved in cell growth, metabolism and cell cycle progression ([@B18]). mTORC1 is a major regulator of protein synthesis and is activated through the phosphorylation of S6K1 and 4EBP1. A phosphorylation cascade leads to the induction of transcription factors, and to the initiation of new ribosomes. Recently, mTORC1 activity has been shown to be involved in the regulation of beta cell mass in an mTORC1-dependent manner. mTORC1-deficient mice and somatic cell-specific mTORC1-deficient mice exhibit a significant decrease in beta cell mass ([@B19]). On the contrary, a previous study showed that mTOR activity, not mTORC1, was involved in the regulation of beta cell mass ([@B12]). A recent study demonstrated that a rapamycin-insensitive form of mTOR (mTORC1<sup>RAPAMYCIN-insensitive</sup>) is critical for beta cell proliferation \*in vivo\* ([@B20]). We hypothesize that the mechanism of MvD3-induced beta cell proliferation may be different from those reported previously. A previous study has shown that silencing of  $\beta$ -catenin in beta cells increases the apoptosis of beta cells via the activation of mTORC1

Q: SwiftUI add a button to tableView cell using a storyboard I have a tableView with static cells. Each cell has a text field and a button. The image of the button is defined in my Storyboard. I would like to know how I can associate the button and the cell on the storyboard. class View: UIViewRepresentable { @Binding var tableData: [Table] func makeUIView(context: Context) -> UITableView { let view = UITableView(frame:.zero, style:.plain) // return self.tableData[0] return view } func updateUIView(_ uiView: UITableView, context: Context) { uiView.reloadData() } } A: The easiest way to do this is to create a Custom Cell. You can use different actions for each cell by declaring different subclass. You can find similar custom cell to match your requirements here. @State private var tableData = Table var body: some View { let tableView = UITableView(frame:.zero, style:.plain) tableView.dataSource = self tableView.delegate = self tableView.register(CustomTableViewCell.self, forCellReuseIdentifier: "Cell") return tableView } } and to add button on top of the cell struct CustomTableViewCell: UITableViewCell { var body: some View { Button(action: {self.updateCellButton}) { Text("Test Button") } } var updateCellButton: () -> () func updateCellButton() { DispatchQueue.main.async { self.tableData.append(Table())
