environment. Swelling. Your dog may have redness and swelling in their skin that comes from an allergy. Trouble breathing. Your dog may be having breathing trouble, and an allergy could be the cause. Sudden weight loss. Your dog may have a sudden loss of appetite and weight, and an allergy may be the reason. Other indications of an allergy are red eyes, tears in the skin, and what is called "collapse." The dog becomes very lethargic and has difficulty breathing, or he collapses and seems unable to breathe at all. How is it treated? If your dog has signs of an allergy, you should first do a skin prick test, as mentioned above. This is how you can test whether your dog is allergic to the thing that is causing the allergy. If the skin prick test shows your dog is allergic to the thing that is causing the allergy, then you will want to do a "trial" treatment that is usually free of charge. If your dog has signs of an allergy and the skin prick test shows they are allergic to a food, then we may need to treat the food to be sure it is the cause of the allergy. This treatment can be a special diet and also an elimination diet. If a special diet is used,
