With the continuing development of 3-D movie technology, a 3-D projection system and a 3-D display device are mature and widely applied in a large scale of fields, e.g., a 3-D projection system to project a 3-D image and a 3-D display device for displaying a 3-D image. In the prior art, a 3-D image includes different types of images, e.g., a stereoscopic image and a single image in which a left eye image and a right eye image are superimposed. As shown in FIG. 1, a display device of the prior art uses a 2-D display device to separate an input image into different images for a left eye and a right eye. When the display device receives an image input from an input signal, the different images (e.g., a left eye image and a right eye image) in the image input are separated from each other, where the separated left eye image and right eye image are respectively projected on a left eye area and a right eye area of a liquid crystal screen of the display device by using a projector. Thus, a viewer wears a pair of special glasses (e.g., passive polarization glasses) on his or her eyes to watch the projection of the left eye image and the right eye image respectively on the left eye area and the right eye area of the liquid crystal screen, and therefore the viewer can watch the 3-D image on the liquid crystal screen. The liquid crystal screen is capable of displaying a left eye image and a right eye image. The difference between the left eye image and the right eye image is that the left eye image and the right eye image have the same image content, but the left eye image and the right eye image have opposite parallax, so that the viewer can watch the 3-D image on the liquid crystal screen. During the 3-D image display process, a 3-D image is converted into a 2-D image first, a left eye image and a right eye image are respectively converted into left eye and right eye images, and the left eye image and the right eye image are then respectively displayed on the left eye area and the right eye area of the liquid crystal screen. However, in a 2-D image display process (2-D image is displayed on a 2-D display device), part of a left eye image and a right eye image are lost during the process
