The Pen Tool, first introduced in Photoshop CS3, is a versatile tool that allows you to make a wide range of geometric and artistic shapes. The Pen Tool can be used to create lines and curves, trim faces, draw shapes, erase unwanted content and create basic freehand patterns. Brushes There are many different types of brushes, but to get started you will need to pick a basic flat or gradient design. Select a brush that best matches your design - a rough fashion tip is to select a brush that has a similar size as the required text size. For text, use the Letter Brush; for lines and strokes, use a Line Brush, and for rounded corners, use the Round Brush. You can also use the Eraser and Inner Shadow Brush to blend one texture with another. Brushes can be created or purchased using the Brush panel found in any toolbox. To create your own, click on a section of your image that you wish to paint - and then press the brush icon (figure 1). While you're drawing with the Pen Tool, a number of paint tools appear that are used to give the brush strokes the appearance you require. These include: You'll notice that some of the paint tools offer more options, such as a Blur tool, whereas others have fewer options, such as the Brush Brush tool. The less options the tool has, the more detail it has to offer. For instance, the Blur tool has a lot of effects that can be applied: you can use a blur effect to soften the brush strokes. This is useful for text, whereas the Brush Brush tool gives you a wide range of effects that will be more useful for designs. If you're familiar with the options on most art programs, Photoshop's variety of brushes and pens is quite similar. However, there are some differences. The Brush panel has five basic tabs: Layer, Appearance, Styles, Brushes and Eraser. Layer With these options, you can apply the brush to a new layer, making brush strokes visible, or you can paint directly onto a layer (which will then appear as a new layer in the Layers panel). If you wish to paint on a layer that is already in place, you can use the name of the layer to quickly find that layer by double-clicking it in the Layers panel, or use the Layer option in the command bar. When you select a layer, the

This is from a meeting today where we discussed what to do with a storage deal. As you may know, the contract lets us use storage withdrawal/re-injection subject to FERC rules. We have received a letter from Sierra Pacific Power Company saying that our contracts that use these withdrawals/re-injections are in breach of Sierra Pacific's tariff. We can renegotiate to use withdrawals/re-injections to store gas in the market, so long as they are under the gas bill. However, there are restrictions on these withdrawals/ re-injections, including that the withdrawal/re-injection not exceed 30% of the injection, the withdrawal must be completed before 5pm, the storage
