If you really want to process the validation and update the $valid option, just: $valid = true; I'm sure there are ways to do it nicer, but that's the cleanest way that I could think of to just determine if the validation is happening. EDIT: If you want to show the radio buttons based on the validation, you would have to use the jquery validate

Is there a way to add this method to the existing class? Thanks in advance. A: Unfortunately, you can only move parts of an existing class into a subclass. An alternative would be to "use" the existing class for a type that doesn't use all of its members: interface Foo { int x(); } class Bar extends Foo implements Fizz {} class Baz extends Foo {} abstract class Foo_Base { public void fizzBzz() { ... } } interface Fizz {} class Fizz_Extension { public void bzz(); } // then you can use the base class for Foo, but then you can't reuse // bzz() as it's not inherited from Foo class C { public void useBzz(); } Foo
