Get the latest free software for Windows, including free programs to burn, convert, play, and organize your digital photos. sothink swf quicker keygen Q: Is it possible to check the path given in `make check` I'm running some test cases written in python, and they currently use sys.path.insert(0, "/some/path/to/stuff"). I'm interested in seeing what that path is, when the tests are run. Is this possible? A combination of pdb and print statements does indeed reveal what the path is, but I really don't feel comfortable manipulating the contents of sys.path. A: If you don't want to mess with sys.path, you can always read the makefile. It's a fairly simple file format. You can get the relative directory (assuming non-recursive makefile): export PATH=$PATH:$BUILD_DIR/bin make check If you're using interactive mode, you could do the same in a interactive Python session to find out what directories are in your current working directory. A: #!/bin/bash make -f ~/.my-makefile-here check where ~/.my-makefile-here is your makefile. test -f.my-makefile-here &&./my-makefile-here where is the directory that makefile is located in
