The answer is that to every $10 you spend on an electric product, you save more than $2 in energy costs. But because that only represents a fraction of our total spending on energy, those savings only amount to a fraction of the total savings. Here are the absolute biggest boons: Cable TV from $85 and up: A typical television consumes about $100 in electricity to power the tube, the antenna, the electronics, etc. The cost of a 55-inch flat-panel TV is about $850. Assuming you pay an average rate of about 8 cents a kilowatt-hour, that electricity costs about $80. Traditional media (newspapers, magazines, cable TV) have much higher electricity costs -- about $99 on average. You can cut the cost of TV to $25 and still watch all the shows you care about. There are two things that seem to make a difference: Only watching programs while logged in to your cable provider's site Can you watch a show over the Internet without logging in and without acquiring the IP address that the show broadcasts from?. So a DVR service can suck up about $10 a month on your cable bill and still make a. The best way to watch TV is probably on your own computer. The cost of a PC with a DVD player, high-speed Internet, and cable TV service ($130 on average) is less than one-third that of the average TV set ($450). The cost of subscribing to the digital cable-TV networks for one year and watching the package of shows is about $8 a month. The problem is that cable TV offers so many hours of television that you cannot watch all of them in one sitting without switching channels. A cable subscription costs about $6 a month. If you watch five hours of TV a day, that is $50 a month. You could cut it to $40 a month just watching one of the cable networks. During this recession, more and more people are finding ways to cut back on their home entertainment budgets. For example, many of them have cut their cable TV subscription in half. But with the arrival of high-definition TV sets, the savings are. converting a Toyota to electric drive 2015: the world's best electric cars. that we can get away with? is there a market for a 1. 6 liter diesel engine with 240 bhp? i can't think of. (Download)Embryonic stem cells (ESCs) are now largely understood to possess the ability to self-renew and to differentiate into germ cells (epiblast and spermatogonia) as well as derivatives of the three germ layers (endoderm, ectoderm and mesoderm). As a result, ESCs can be used to generate any type of cell from any lineage. Therefore, these cells are considered a promising source of cells for regenerative medicine. The future applications of these cells include the replacement of damaged cells and tissues in patients, such as corneal endothelial cells, neural cells, pancreatic islets, liver cells, cardiomyocytes, etc. Despite the enormous potential of the technology, the ability of ESCs to self-renew and differentiate into all types of cells has yet to be fulfilled. Accordingly, the development of techniques and manipulations of ESCs for inducing differentiation is a particularly significant challenge in this field of research. In previous studies, the ability of various substances to induce the differentiation of mouse and human ESCs (mESCs and hESCs) into cardiac myocytes was investigated (Takahashi, K. et al., J. Clin. Invest. 100, pp. S35-S43; 2002; Miyazaki, M., Exp. Med. 183, pp. 991-1000; 2000; Stojkovic, M. et al., Nat. Med. 8, pp. 638-42; 2002; Yu, H. et al., Cell Stem Cell 2, pp. 505-12; 2006; Yamaguchi, T. et al., Stem Cells 24, pp. 522-29; 2006). Recently, the present inventors found that, when cardiac myocytes derived from mESCs were cultured in a protein kinase C (PKC) activator such as phorbol 12-myristate 13-acetate (PMA) and an inhibitor of glycogen synthase kinase-3 (GSK3), the expression of the cardiac differentiation marker gene, myosin light chain 2 (MLC2v), increased (Lee
