Q: Why do I get a ReferenceError in my Elm application, but not when I run Elm's toplevel I created an Elm application called hello_elm, and after running it in the toplevel with: $ elm-explore hello_elm I get the error ReferenceError: SyntaxError: [a-zA-Z].fromInt is not a function If I run it in the same folder with elm run hello_elm, I get no errors. Why? A: I just ran into this myself. The problem is that elm-make creates a build directory with a .js extension, and calling elm-make --index.elm --output build.js doesn't seem to be the right way. It should be called with --output build.js --index.elm. And the hack I found to get around this is to rename the output build.js file to index.elm, and run elm-make again. When you have to get it. ===== ntserk I think you'll have to save it over at least 5 or 6 years to get the initial investment, even if you were to get some money from an investment fund. I would be concerned about the credibility of the product/market fit. Also, are you willing to wait? ~~~ rythmsurgeon Actually, I don't have that problem. I will be able to build the product with my savings and investors that will be willing to invest and later buy the product at that time. ----- econcon How about the stock market? ~~~ rythmsurgeon Not bad idea. But when I have to share a portion of my stockholding with the investor, I will lose on part of my earnings. ~~~ aeroevan Keep 80% of the money for yourself. ~~~ rythmsurgeon I was saying that I need that first money for doing development work and getting the product ready.
