You play a 2D, pixel-art-riddled, ASCII-based text adventure. You are a pale-skinned, green-eyed, pointy-eared, but not particularly heroic-looking dog. You save a princess. While you're doing that, you're being simultaneously attacked by the Smog, abducting dogs, and looking for Soothe Tape. Your current adventure takes place on the road map and your telepathic protégé. You can either listen to the story be told to you, or read it with the handy narrator, or type in your own story. Or go insane and keep asking questions. The ultimate goal is to get to a chain restaurant named "Moochmooch," in the land of Moochmooch, of course. The game is full of art. A lot of characters are voiced. The whole game is ASCII. You're an anthropomorphic dog in a text adventure. You can bet your last bone that you will never guess what happens in the end. *You can use TAB to autocomplete text. *You can skip cutscenes with ESC. *You can read the text with the.READ command, or the interactive narrator with the /N command. *You can use the Pause key while the text is being read, or saved game, or another command, or you can just look down while you're reading, while not pausing. *You can set a hotkey for the /N command by using the.KEY command. *You can rewind and play from any point with the LRU or RAU commands. *You can skip the first cutscene by pressing . You can then keep skipping cutscenes to the next one, or any one. *You can use the Keyboard commands instead of the.READ or /N command. (saves the current line, in case the game says something that should be autocompleted) .READ text WHERE tells the game to read the next part of the text to the specified point. .READ PPP tells the game to read the paragraph then go to the last letter of the current word. Main Menu The Narrator doesn't narrate or explain anything in this game, so you're on your own for figuring stuff out. Its a linear game so its pretty short. The turn-based combat system isn't the most innovative, but it works well for what it is. It certainly gets the job done. You can attack, and if you have the right weapon you have a chance to take a new action, which can range from attacking, using items or interacting with your party members. You'll spend plenty of time in your inventory, and most of those items can be reused (with a few exceptions). It makes no attempt to be complex, so if you just want to play a quick game and ignore the story aspect, then you should be fine. The battle system is very simple. You have three slots for your actions to be taken in combat. Depending on what weapon you have equipped, you'll have one action and one slot for your items and two (1+1) for the item you want to use. If youre equipped with a gun and one of your items is healing, you can shoot it and heal your party. It's really easy to see what you can use next, and you can do anything you want in the scope of the context. It really doesn't need to be complicated. Character graphics can be a bit dull, but they arent terrible, so you'll get used to it. Each party member gets a stats and skills screen that shows their basic stats and how useful they are at doing different things. It also shows you which stats they'll increase when you get better equipment, which is useful in case you need to do something with an item that might require them to boost those stats. All of the characters grow as the story goes on, but they won't be terribly useful much of the time. You can see what they might be good at doing from the stats section. You can also have multiple members of the party at a time. There are three types of characters: Adventurers, who are mostly there to explore, trade, and fight monsters, Mages, who are powerful and can use magic, and Clerics, who are mostly there to heal your party. You can have up to five of these types, so there's plenty of variety. Combat is still fun, even when it gets repetitive. Sometimes it can get a little grindy, but that's rare. The world is a fairly

-Madison City quarterback race is not unlike that classic Yankee versus Boston Red Sox rivalry. Sure, when the Yankees get hot, New York generally wins, but once the series shifts to Fenway Park and it is Boston, Yankee fans get nervous. That's how it is with the Bulldogs and the Tigers. Traditionally, Madison City looks like a small town while Madison's popularity stretches to every nook and cranny of the Mississippi coast. The Bulldogs play out of a small-town venue: a $4 million, 11,000-seat stadium located in the heart of Madison. Known for its fun atmosphere and exciting locker room, the Bulldogs are everything that Madison City is not. At a glance, the Bulldogs often look like underdogs. In recent years, they have become the Yankees of the state circuit. In 2007, Mississippi State won the Division II football national championship and finished with a record of 9-2. The Bulldogs went 10-2 in 2008, and in the process the bulldog appeared on the cover of the popular sports magazine Bleacher Report. The Bulldogs won the D-II championship in 2011, beating North Dakota State in the 35-point blowout. Last year was particularly significant. With a white-clad, 40,000-plus-fan-strong crowd in attendance, Madison City proceeded to defeat both Austin Peay and Southern Illinois in consecutive weeks by only a combined four points. The Bulldogs lost the division championship game to West Alabama in Week 2 on a five-yard touchdown pass to backup quarterback Denzel Felton. The season finale was a heartbreaker for Bulldogs fans. Madison City beat Jackson State by only five points and lost a heartbreaker to Ohio Valley, the eventual national champion. That teams don't always win no matter what they do in this state can be seen as a phenomenon. If Madison City plays well, the Bulldogs win; if not, the Bulldogs lose. The Dakota Valley, Texas, Red River (not the one in North Dakota and Minnesota), and others all do the same thing. Why do they keep losing? I interviewed a list of Madison City Bulldog players for the true story surrounding why the Bulldogs lost, and the answer was simple. Right now, they have a very good quarterback named Nick Fitzgerald. Nick Fitzgerald is not a bad football player. He is a consistent dualthreat quarterback who has the necessary skills to throw a spiral and run the football if the situation called for it. During seven years at Madison
