"A board game with a twist that will definitely keep you on your toes." 8/10 - Massive Games "Game play is fluid, even during the more intensive combat, and there's always a new strategy to try." 8/10 - Cane and Effect "A solid marriage of an intellectual tactical board game and a fast-paced, high-action RPG." About the Game
Legendary Journeys is an action-RPG hybrid that puts the player in control of an interstellar archeologist who has arrived at a distant planet to investigate its ruins. He is the first in a new, highly specialized field of archeology, which is guided by the theory of eight distinct facets that compose a civilization. As the player discovers the mysteries of the planet, he is assisted by his archeologist allies, who can then be customized to play the role of expert adviser to the player character or perform more adventuring activities. He is joined on his quest by a crew of highly competent, yet also highly unstable, specialists, who will accompany him in the journey. Players must keep a careful eye on each other and the elements at the same time. The game has a real-time and turn-based battle system, the combat features a responsive but challenging and skill-based encounter system, and the main story is told through conversations that can be skipped by the player in any order. There are no random battles. It is possible to win battles solely by means of stats and a roster of 25 companions. The Tales of Jad is a post-apocalyptic fantasy setting on which the player must complete tasks in order to rescue a princess kidnapped by the sinister, Undead forces of the dark undead castle, Rauruza. The player travels between day and night in a setting filled with ancient ruins, crumbling medieval towns, and primitive tribal villages. It is a large, open sandbox game, with a clear moral compass and meaning. It is not a typical role-playing game; it is a destination-based storytelling game that features a day/night mechanic and a simple combat system. Jad is set in a world undergoing a "purge," a transformation wrought by a mysterious darkness that is slowly sweeping over the land. All but the most devout followers of Agad, the law of order, have abandoned their way of life in this world, as they seek to escape the ever-darkening night. They have gathered in town squares,

Other than the fact that the tags differ, how do Stack Exchange know that an instance of "Do they have " is a question and a link to an appropriate answer? How does the system differentiate between a question and an answer? A: There are a few things: The tags on the question are important; it's the first thing we look at to see if it's on topic or not. For SO, those tags are searched when we crawl the question, so any solution must be tagged as such. Those tags are looked for on the answers, as the question is only interesting to us if it has an answer. There are some other places where the title and body have some influence on the tag system, but that isn't a primary means of how tags work. The main part of the way that we know what a question is is by the user who asked it. Once a question has a tag, you can look at the tags to see if they're the right ones for that question. But someone can edit tags on their own answer, so sometimes that won't work. So there's also an edit history we're looking at, but not that frequently. As to why we have different tags for the two, there's a couple of answers on meta.SE about that: Which tags to use for questions and answers Why are there different tags for questions and answers? But it's a bit more complicated than that. For answers, we have some tags for common types of question: The Question Tags page has a list of tags for questions, for each type of question. For answers, the main distinction is between types of answers: The Types of Answers page has a list of tags that describe the kind of content on an answer (and also have tags for the type of user, the type of question it's answering, etc). A: Difficult to tell, it's not really an automated process. It's a combination of the entire userbase coming up with a tag list that then gets checked as part c9d1549cdd

What's new:

The Light of Summer is a novel written by Thomas Hardy for his publishers, John Masefield and George Alexander. It was published in February 1908. Plot Introduction The plot revolves around two young men during the early course of college at Oxford University. As the story opens, Percival Clyffe, the son of wealthy parents and occasionally bullied by his acquaintance Frank Reardon, sits listening to his college tutor. Reardon, with whom Clyffe is in love, one day returns from college. The young man seeing how deeply affected he is left to ponder the following day. The next day he tells Reardon that he will have to leave Oxford, and although there was no reason for him to do so, he does so. The next two days are marked in a parallel fashion, with the narrator reflecting on what he cannot wait to experience, and on the end of the period with his tentatively returning to the women he left behind. From there he has a series of affairs and one major betrayal that is damaging. Characters in the novel include: Percival, a young man who has left his parents home on the pretense of valuing academic and intellectual pursuits, his parents who are worldly-hearted, and his tutor Mr. Geddes. Other characters include Lord Septimus Trelawney, fellow student Avery (Percival's friend), Professor Rennap, a painter, Frank Reardon a married man (a student of Haddon Hall whose acquaintance Clyffe has), a baker, his wife, and Hester, Paul's fiancée, who is being courted by Frank. The fourth and fifth chapters are in the vein of many college novels, the last one marking the defection of Paul from sexual innocence and happiness (marriage) to an advanced stage of life. Unlike other Hardy novels, it is rather short, at 55 chapters, and comprises only 1843 words. It is divided into nine parts, each with a specific function in the plot. They are titled: Scene One: "The Four" - Which appears to be an outsider's tone toward the reception at the Trelawnes'. Scene Two: "The Bride and the Breakfast" - This is where his wedding is described. Scene Three: "The Party at Sea" - A description of Paul and Hester's meeting and the scene afterwards. Scene Four: "The Sundering of their Bonds" - which shows the end of sexual innocence and happiness. Scene Five: "Wedding Thoughts"
