In a web application, I have a label that I would like to append some text to. For example, I have hello World I want the application to append some code to this label, or even just color the label so that we can tell the difference. All I can see is.Text which I am under the impression is not what I want as the label is loaded into a page from a database (so the text will be different for each page). Is there another way to append text to a label? A: I am afraid that is the only way to append it. You cannot use control.Text, this changes it's original content. However you can use ClientScriptManager.RegisterClientScriptBlock method to add it dynamically. The best practice in my point of view is to extract it to a ViewBag property. For example your view would look like this: @Html.LabelFor(m => m.

www.youtube.com/watch?v=cje0pzrhNVI The Game Mastering team, of Vampyr Producer Chris Avellone and from Planescape: Torment, has shown an early play-through of Tarnished for the PC. It looks rather pretty, although with the default settings you don't really see what all of the game is trying to portray as it's definitely showing off the graphical fidelity. The battle interface just looks epic and the bosses definitely look deep. www.youtube.com/watch?v=J1GqHsHc5wc [embed] [embed] [embed] [embed] [embed] While we couldn't go hands on due to the fact that it's still under embargo, we did manage to get our hands on the PS4 version. In case you don't know, Planescape: Torment is regarded as one of the best RPGs ever made. Especially in the last few years, it's been described as a coming of age for the genre and a major milestone for RPG games. Tarnished has the opportunity to rewrite the rulebook and leave a lasting legacy. The game is made by a very small team from the biggest RPG developer in the world, Focus Interactive, and the state of the art version of the Tarnished engine that is powering the highly anticipated Transistor. The game is being built for Xbox One and PC, not for PS4, but you can assume that the cut content seen on the PS4 version will be featured in the PC and Xbox One version as well.
