We may not know the final design of the MacBook Pro with Retina Display just yet, but it looks like it will have a docked video out port. Photographs of a prototype from a Taiwanese source, published by DigiTimes, show a side edge that has holes in it that are believed to be for an output port. The holes could be for a mini DisplayPort, a mini HDMI, or something else altogether. For reference, the MacBook Air we saw a couple weeks ago has a similar hole for a video port, but it's a different design. In the image above, it appears that the port is slightly recessed within the side edge of the machine. If this is the case, it's hard to say if this will be the final design of the MacBook Pro with Retina Display, which remains a mystery. The display panel on the updated MacBook Air is still a mystery, as well. But if the notebooks are anything like the MacBook Air and the iPad Air, we probably won't know for
