Smart Objects and Smart Filters Photoshop comes with Smart Objects, which are basically file formats that enable other programs to edit, resize, and manipulate your image, and even let you use filters with them. With Smart Filters, you can apply different filters and effects to layers in your image to bring out the most from your image. You can also create a new layer, apply a filter, and then merge that layer with another layer or group of layers. You can also create a `_mask_` (a transparent layer that defines which portion of the image is edited), as well as re-size, rotate, and layer. Here's how you use Smart Objects and Smart Filters: * Photoshop CS6: Select the Smart Object or Smart Filter (tool) and then, in the Tools panel, select the Smart Object tool icon. You use the same techniques for creating and applying Smart Filters. * Photoshop Elements: Select the Smart Object or Smart Filter (tool), and then select the Apply option to apply it. * Lightroom: The menu options for applying a filter change slightly depending on the app version you're using. On Lightroom, choose the Develop module. Then choose Filters→Adjustments (for the desktop version) or Effects→Adjustments (for the mobile version). In this menu, you can apply filters just to a group of layers, or apply an adjustment layer. Then choose Combine Layers, and you can find Smart Object or Smart Filter links on this menu.

The ratio of nuclear over cytoplasmic ezrin is a prognostic factor in colorectal cancer. The plasma membrane cytoskeleton is important in controlling cell function by maintaining intercellular adhesion, migration, and communication. In this study, we determined the expression of a cell-cell adhesion molecule, ezrin, in tumor cells, and evaluated its usefulness as a prognostic factor in colorectal cancer. The expression of ezrin was examined by immunohistochemistry in tumor sections from 112 colorectal cancers. An independent significance test was performed to assess the prognostic value of each factor in the survival curve analysis. In 112 colorectal cancers, the expression of ezrin in the tumor cells was positive in 25.0% and negative in 75.0%. Significant correlations were observed between negative ezrin expression and depth of invasion of the tumor, lymph node metastasis, the degree of cell differentiation, lymph vessel invasion and other risk factors. Univariate analysis and multivariate analysis revealed ezrin positivity to be an independent prognostic factor in the survival curve analysis. Negative ezrin expression in colorectal cancer was associated with a worse prognosis, and this finding suggests that ezrin may be a new prognostic factor for colorectal cancer.
