A: This looks a bit odd... 8400 0 winmain_win8rc 120518 1423 download 60. It looks like the first word is WINMAIN, and the last word is WINmain. Winmain should be changed to Winmain_ and the _ after that should be changed to an opening parenthesis... Winmain_win8rc should be Winmain_win8rc. It would also be helpful to see the whole output you are getting... Tag Archives: Inventor American physicist and Nobel-prize winning physicist Ernest Rutherford is often cited as one of the greatest scientific figures of all time, and very likely for good reason. His research into radioactivity, chemistry and other sciences changed the way we see the world and helped us understand the makeup of the very materials that compose our daily lives. This was in no small part through the discovery of the nucleus, the core of the atom, in the 1920s. Without that discovery, we wouldn't have the tools we have to transform and re-shape substances in ways we could never have thought of before. However, the technology Rutherford's research gave us to do this is what has come under a cloud in recent years. Rutherford pioneered the development of methods of radioactivity and did so by a combination of solid research and luck. But what if we had to re-discover all of that on our own, from scratch? A new company has just launched a Kickstarter campaign looking to bring about exactly that: the United States Inventor. And if you're like most people, you might be wondering why? Read on for a look at how it might change the way we do science and invent. Rutherford made his famous discovery because he was merely lucky; a random discovery from a seeming random event. The founders of the United States Inventor claim that there are many ways to invent, and that luck doesn't have to play such a huge role. By letting scientific equipment be in charge, instead of a person, the chances of finding something of real scientific value increases greatly. With access to all of the scientific equipment it needs, it won't be necessary for scientists to make decisions and take risks of making mistakes on their own. They can use the resources of modern science to their advantage, rather than being forced to take a risk and do it on their own.
