Incident trying to be that guy who puts himself out there (makes an effort to get to know folks, and share his info with them) Having spent 5 years in the ED and being well-versed with the ins and outs of being on and off Call, I discovered that there's this whole other side to ED MDs you don't hear much about...the rapid response side. And I want to put myself out there as a kind of ED RRT, at least to let the community know what's going on at the medical end of it. May 23, 2014 Thankfully, it's been a relatively pain-free summer in New York City so far, and I've found that some of my regular routine has had the chance to come back to me while I've been on vacation. There have been a few particular highlights. The first was a 24-hour shift I volunteered at Bellevue with New York Cares on June 5th. As part of their summer outreach programs for children, we helped wrap thousands of boxes for delivery to local "BELIEVE" Centers for abused and neglected children. The second highlight was the evening of June 18th, when I was on the ED for a 24-hour "call" to respond to a 911 call for a young woman who had jumped out a window of her apartment, landing awkwardly. The goal was to take her to the local hospital via the ambulance, but the inside of the ambulance was just jammed with multiple patients, so the patient was instead transported to another hospital to have her right leg elevated in the OR. The third and final highlight was during the Memorial Day weekend, when I served as a stand-by for this weekend's NYC marathon. I was given a "toner" I think (seriously--I don't have a deep ED tattoo or anything like that, but I was just given this really simple "toner") in the form 6d1f23a050
