This will avoid accessibility problems and, if you make multiple alternative descriptions, will make your web site more accessible. You are encouraged to provide descriptions for all nodes that have accessibility annotations. The preferred mode for describing accessibility is to use a dedicated subset of HTML of that of the main body. The longdesc attribute in HTML 4.0 is probably the best way of providing alternate descriptions. If you do not provide any alternative descriptions, then the main text of a node will be used for the alternative descriptions.
