Still in the making, pretty nervous about how it will look and how it's gonna work, but looks pretty good so far... Well, it's done, and it works. It's a dual VGA/HDMI cable splitter, a color wheel filter, and two X-Axis eyepiece focus for a pair of CMOS lensed... I've built a couple and one was my 3rd one. This one is an improved version over the 2nd one. To set this up you need to have a hotshoe to VCA transmitter, Y-Axis motorised focus rail(2) and focus key(2) for eyepiece use. I had the 2nd one have an extra CIO on the left side for computer use, since there is no commercial replacement for a CIO/full-screen computer monitor. And I have a pretty slow 7200 rpm hard drive for back-up, even if you have a much faster one. Having a PC IDE keyboard/monitor on the TV side I can then set up a TRENDnet TG9950 Ethernet adapter on the computer side. I have never tested the internet speed over Cat5 cable from this TV to a PC. The main focus is getting the image onto the TV board 6d1f23a050
