I'd like to know if it is possible to use a "screen" inside another "screen"? Something like: screen -c irssi -X main_server screen -c irssi -X main_screen I don't want a simple command line - what I want is to be able to add commands to the second "screen" (like :Net::SSH::Term::ReadLine or :Net::SSH::Term::Escape), but that's not possible, right? A: I started to answer this question but then decided to not do so, the correct answer, as far as I can see it, is: no, you can't do this. a screen is essentially a start-stop-daemon only, with the monitor being attached to the TTY, it

Many adolescent women come to clinical settings for treatment of disorders affecting pregnancy and childbirth. Adolescents are considered young women by the legal system and legislative bodies, but they are a special group with unique needs and concerns regarding their health care that are often not addressed in traditional informed consent and health care-related research protocols. Ethical and legal issues regarding research involving young women are complex and not yet fully developed. Informed consent for youth should account for their physical and psychological development and the unique challenges of their relationship with physicians.Q: Navigation to a different page using angularjs I am using AngularJS for my application and I have a template url like Now when I click on menu icon in Menu.html and I want to redirect to home.html I am using AngularJS like this: `$location.path('/home');` But it is not working.. I think `$location.path` is only for navigation with Same URL.. I want to go with different page using Angular JS.. Is there anyway to do it with angular? A: Have you tried using the $stateProvider to route your application? Let's say you have the following application: app/ controllers/ menu.js home.js And let's say in the menu.js controller you want the user to be redirected to home.html. Then you could use:

app.config(function ($stateProvider) { $stateProvider
.state('home', { template: 'home.html', 6d1f23a050
