He-Man and the Masters of the Universe was developed by Michael Halperin for television and was produced by Embassy Row Productions in conjunction with DIC Entertainment, DiC Entertainment, and its sister studio DIC Animation City (which was responsible for the production of the film Dark Crystal and most of the Beastmaster series). In fact, the director of the film, Peter Chung, was also the executive producer of the TV series. It first aired on September 1, 1992, on the Fox Kids network, and was originally intended to run for two seasons, but was renewed for a total of 14 seasons. The show would run from 1992 to 1998. The 2002 version of He-Man and the Masters of the Universe is a CGI-animated television series that ran on The CW from 2002 to 2005, and Nickelodeon from 2002 to 2006. Created by Michael Halperin, the premise of the series takes place on the fictional planet of Eternia, where a race of warriors known as "He-Man" and "She-Ra" use a mystical bracelet called the "Skeets" to summon and transform into a superhero named "He-Man". The show ran on broadcast syndication from 2002 to 2005, and was the first series to be distributed for home video release by Cartoon Network DVD. The sequel, Masters of the Universe: The Second Masters, was retitled to The New Adventures of He-Man due to the first film's domestic release. In both films, the music featured in the series is performed by a score called "He-Man and the Masters of the Universe." The New Adventures of He-Man (2002) is a two-part movie. The first part, titled "He-Man and the Masters of the Universe: Prequel", aired on April 25, 2002. The second part, "He-Man and the Masters of the
