More, A .Q: Simultaneous Differential Equation Can someone explain the following two questions to me? Show that if f is a function that satisfies the differential equation $f'' + f = 0$, then the function $\sin(\frac{1}{f})$ satisfies the same equation. Hint: Use Laplace transforms. Give a general method for finding solutions of second-order differential equations with constant coefficients that are homogeneous in x . The first question is really simple. f is a solution of an equation. $\sin(\frac{1}{f})$ is a function. $\sin(\frac{1}{f})$ is a solution of the same equation. For the second question, the differential equation is homogeneous, so the general method would be to put in ax as in other problems. So I would get $(a^2 + a + 1)f' + afx = 0$ and try and solve this. A: You cannot deduce that a function satisfying the equation $f'' + f = 0$ is a solution of the equation $\sin(\frac{1}{f})'' + \sin(\frac{1}{f}) = 0$ from the fact that f satisfies this latter equation. For instance, if $f(x) = e^{x^2}$ and $g(x) = \sin(x)$, then f and g satisfy the same differential equation, but f is not a solution of the differential equation $g'' + g = 0$. In general, the functional equation $g(x+y) = g(x)g(y)$ is equivalent to the differential equation $y g'(y) + g(y) = g(y+x)g(x)$.
