A U.S. House committee on Friday sought emails from a Gmail account belonging to former White House national security adviser Michael Flynn that went missing as a result of hacking. The House Intelligence Committee said in a letter that it is seeking an “electronic communication” from Flynn’s Gmail account, which was hacked and put out on the web. The committee is seeking a copy of “the electronic communication, the redacted version of which is attached, from your Nov. 15, 2016, through May 18, 2017,” it said. The committee previously sought those documents, including drafts, documents and emails from Flynn’s private Twitter account, from Dec. 2, 2016, through May 18, 2017, when he resigned as national security adviser after misleading Vice President Mike Pence and other administration officials about his communications with Russian Ambassador Sergey Kislyak. The committee’s announcement came as Yates and Flynn have faced negative scrutiny over their accounts of their last moments as national security adviser and the people they told about their interactions with Russian officials. His British counterpart Sir Philip Hammond said the compromise deal was “a really good compromise” that offered a “high level of security” for the women and girls. He added that the deal would allow the return of some unaccompanied children, which he said were only 18 per cent of the total. But at least another 50 men were expected to be handed over. c6a93da74d
