is exactly what the expression il ya du quotidien (there is everyday life) means. du quotidien (1980). The tendency to simplify the problem of man is one of the most characteristic features of the philosophical thought of our time. It can be argued that it was characteristic not only of philosophy, but also of science. At one time, it became so widely known that it became the object of criticism both in philosophy and in other sciences. Numerous discussions that took place during the 19th century testify to this. At the end of the 19th century, during the "philosophical renaissance", this tendency became even more pronounced.
