biology research, drug discovery and clinical diagnostics. Sensors for these biomolecules should be able to detect the analyte of interest in environments that are far from ideal. We have synthesized a fluorescent probe (termed fluzen) that responds to the specific binding of proteins and polypeptides by triggering an off-on switching of its fluorescence. Fluzen consists of a small, photo-responsive trans-tetraethylene diphenobenzoquinone dimer that becomes fluorescent upon receiving an off-on trigger. We have employed fluzen to selectively detect proteins and polypeptides in environments that are far from ideal. In the presence of a biological analyte, fluzen responds by switching off its fluorescence. This can be done without impacting the biological target, such as the nucleic acids of an oligonucleotide. The probe was able to distinguish between analytes that bind to the target site simultaneously, as well as those that bind to the target at different times. Fluzen is a biologically compatible, non-toxic molecule that can be used to detect target analytes that are normally difficult to study.

A judge who criticized the way the governor dealt with the Flint water crisis this month was removed from the bench and is refusing to return to work, according to the state's highest court. The Michigan Supreme Court ordered Michigan's Court of Appeals to remove Judge Stephen Borrello from the bench within 10 days. As he has declined to comment, a source close to the judge said it's likely that he will retire or resign. Borrello criticized the way Gov. Rick Snyder and his administration responded to the water crisis in the c6a93da74d
