we are pleased to announce the availability of slurm versions 15.07.1, 15.08.6, and 17.01.2, which includes a series of recent bug fixes and small user-visible enhancements, and a fix for a recently discovered security vulnerability (cve-2018-10045).a pdf preview of the slurm documentation is available here.downloads are available here.slurm version 17.2 fixes a regression introduced in the prior 17.1 release which made it easier to create a bad system state on a system already compromised. in other words, the issue is similar to the one we described in the introduction of this post. slurm version 17.1 introduced a "move without release" behavior for the slurmadd program. in addition, users should be aware that the slurmd daemon now takes over upon the failure of a node in an active pool. if, for some reason, you need to terminate one or more compute nodes, you can do so via scontrol, which is part of slurmctld. slurm versions 16.05.6 and 17.00.1 are no longer supported. they only remain available as a precaution in the event of certain issues arising with the remaining releases. downloads are available here. we are pleased to announce the availability of slurm release candidate version 22.05rc1.to highlight some new features coming in 22.05: support for dynamic node addition and removal support for native cgroup/v2 operation newly added plugins to support hpe slingshot 11 networks (switch/hpe_slingshot), and intel xe gpus (gpu/oneapi) added new acct_gather_interconnect/sysfs plugin to collect statistics from arbitrary network interfaces expanded and synced the set of environment variables available in the prolog/epilog/prologslurmctld/epilogslurmctld scripts added --prefer option to job submissions to allow for a soft constraint request to influence node selection this is the first release candidate of the upcoming 22.05 release series, and represents the end of development for this release, and a finalization of the rpc and state file formats.if any issues are identified with this release candidate, please report them through the slurm bugzilla against the 22.05.x version and we will address them before the first production 22.0 release is made.please note that the release candidates are not intended for production use.a preview of the updated documentation can be found here.downloads are available here.

Facebook has more or less dominated the world of social media. Whats amazing is that the companys online activity can be easily accessed, using a few online tools. Whats amazing is that hundreds of users are dumping data online with no intention of ever watching over their shoulder. Facebook does an incredible job of keeping its users data private, but thats really no security. Its a illusion of privacy, and its an illusion of security. Facebooks privacy policies are almost impossible to enforce, and its lack of a encryption system that would make online data harder to hack makes the companys systems nearly as vulnerable as average email. Facebook is a big company, and its difficult to keep up with its long list of privacy policies and security promises. While you might be able to find the programs you need, the process might be complicated, or you might not be able to figure out how to use the programs. Its a costly and dangerous problem to have, and it highlights Facebooks tremendous lack of security. Facebook is a great thing, and thats why you should always avoid posting any sensitive information there. Posting random material online might seem harmless, but most people do not take into account how hackers can use the information they steal from them to breach their personal security or to inflict harmful effects on their lives. http:// means there is a website on the internet called Facebook. com and you can access the companys website by entering http://facebook. com into a web browser on your computer. There is a default username of your email address associated with your account. In that case, its myname@yourcompany. com. If your not using the default email address, then enter your email address in the field. 5ec8ef588b
