try to keep your network traffic to a minimum, and make sure that any software you're installing does so as well. an attacker can easily change the way a program communicates with other devices. many software applications have a feature to allow you to set a default port for a network service. choose a port number that's far away from the standard ports, such as ports that's used by windows, or the ports used by other applications. ensure that you're aware of the knime server license agreement and accept it. the license agreement is visible when you start up the knime server installation. all users of the knime server must accept the license agreement. if you're concerned about the possibility of someone else obtaining your knime server license, you can disable it. you can't use your license to install knime server on other computers. you can't share your license with other people. you can also disable the license in the knime server web admin interface. in windows 10, users have to turn on two-step verification in their accounts and pick a 2-step method, such as the microsoft authenticator app or the phone calls from their microsoft account in skype, to authenticate with the online accounts. when windows hello recognizes the gesture or pin, the system creates a credential for the user, and if the user provides an email address or phone number, microsoft sends an sms or calls that person to validate the user. a one-time password

(otp) is sent via the authenticator app that the user must then enter. each authenticator app has a unique code that is stored in a locally available database. once the user enters the code into the app, the windows hello login is complete. 5ec8ef588b
