That we see the best-case scenario: We dont know what will happen when we are logged in to Facebook in other apps that dont also use the web plug-in. For example, if we are logged into a game that uses the new plug-in (think Zynga Poker or Clash of Clans), then using Facebook may open a separate web browser window. If we are not signed in to Facebook, we could be asked to log in as if we were on the web. If the other app lets us set the default browser that we use, that could happen. But if youre used to having separate windows for different things, the changes may not be so significant. You will have to see for yourself what happens. And if you want to be sure that Facebook doesnt capture your access to your email, calendar or other apps, you can log out of Facebook and see what that does. The whole deal is a huge deal.

And even if it doesn't work for you, it may be great for users who use other apps. We did not come across any apps that are using the new Facebook plug-in yet. But there are a few apps that are using alternative methods of accessing Facebook in iOS 8. RockMelt is the first one to offer this type of mobile access. And it doesn't necessarily have to offer a desktop-like desktop experience. Read its explainer on the concept. You can review app details and the Facebook Hacker APK forum and much more. You can use our App file location and App file list tools to download APKs for Facebook Hacker APK from the play store and install for offline use. If you have problem downloading or installing the Facebook Hacker APK, please contact to us. You can also download Android Market apps or app APK files for your Android device manually.
