Collection Offline Update For Windows 7 X86 64 Bit

This is a release of the fast SSL/TLS password encryption provider OpenSCrypt-NG that is based on the original implementation by Eric Young, with extended default parameters and improved performance. The following changes were made in this release: Support for 64-bit architectures (arm, amd64, x86) Added --hidden-pid support to openvpn-2.5.2.exe. This is required for setting the PPID in the openvpn process on Windows 7. This is a feature provided by Windows to allow OpenVPN to display the correct PPID when openvpn starts with the -pid option. This is required for Windows to start the service correctly, and can be used by NetSh or other server software to debug VPN issues. Replaced AES-256-CBC with 2-key AES-128-CBC for OpenVPN 2.5.x. The latter is not a standard as of yet, but has been widely adopted. OpenVPN 2.5.x also uses a partial compatibility layer to allow it to compile and function on OpenSSL versions that do not support AES-256-CBC. Removed LZO support for OpenVPN 2.5.x. LZO support is still required for built-in clients such as OpenConnect/ICP. However, OpenVPN 2.5.x does not use LZO for any of its services as the resulting executable and libraries are approximately 1.7 MB larger. Added a check for --dev-lib-VER parameter, so OpenVPN will default to the library version already present if one is given. Removed use of pkg-config for detecting the AES-256/CBC cipher and configured it manually. Improved performance for server code; decoded the config file twice. Added support for conditional compilation symbols within the config file. Added a check for CONFIG_REQ_UNCONFINED_PRIVATE_ENCRYPTION in the config file for detection of private encryption. Added the all-in-one SSL/TLS password encryption OpenSCrypt-NG to the download package. It is easy to configure and will work in conjunction with other OpenVPN versions that follow the 2.5.x series. Added the updated binaries to the download package for OpenVPN 2.5.x. Added a notice for the exact change in the version number to the installer. 5ec8ef588b
