The Terminator Sex Scene [REPACK]

the movie is never clear whether kyle reese is the man in the machine, or whether it is arnold himself. the script says both, but that the audience is to make up its own mind. the movie is certainly fun, and does a good job of setting the scene, but the plot is all over the place, and i have no idea how the characters are meant to interact and what the point is. the main problem is that we never really know what is going on, and the plot twists don't really work. the movie spends far too long with a character who is supposed to be a symbol of hope, but who only ever offers a couple of decent lines of dialogue before he disappears. there is also a confusing running subplot about a terminator who has been out of service for a long time. this terminator is one of the first on the list to be downloaded to be a servant, and he is only activated later in the story. there are a few more interesting characters, but none that get enough screen time. the film seems to be more about the main characters than the story itself. at one point, the script says we are going to see how they react to events, but there is no actual reaction, as they simply stand there. i felt the only reason the terminator was present was to give the audience a target to shoot at, and the only reason they are in the film is to give some character development to some of the supporting characters. the movie is generally pretty stylish, but the hand-to-hand combat scenes with the t-800, especially the fight with the t-1000, just dont work. there is a memorable scene with the two machines having a duel in a room with lots of mirrors. some of the fight scenes are shot in a style reminiscent of the italian flicks of the 1960s, but with a lot more fire.

The Terminator Sex Scene

(at around 35 mins) the two of them fight in the parking lot of the conner house, and the terminator manages to get sarah to the ground, and then john connor, and now he has both of them down on the ground. the only reason the terminator needs to get down on the ground is because his massive size, combined with the fact that it can move its legs and knees on its own, allows it to function like an ordinary human being and not trip or fall over himself. but because it can bend its knee on its own and move its feet on its own, it can get its massive strength behind its body to force itself down on the ground to inflict pain and injury on the person it just kidnapped and now holds captive. the only reason it needs to get its hands dirty is to grip the human being, and to inflict its rage and fury on them. and yet, when the terminator is finally able to crush johns head and kill him, it seems like an act of mercy. (around 45 mins) theyre fighting on the stairs, as the terminator is trying to get away from johns friends and so he has to step up the pace. but at the same time, the terminator gets to the top of the stairs faster than john, and we see that hes wearing the same form-fitting black t-shirt as john, and john says to him, i think youre wearing the same shirt i am, and the terminator just shrugs. why wouldnt he have a vest or a jacket on, when its so cold outside? its getting to the point that the terminator isnt even trying to hide its identity, it is simply being itself. its not wearing a jacket or a vest, it is wearing a t-shirt and it isnt trying to hide it. its like a black-clad superhero, not a robot.
