The aim of this study was to evaluate the effects of a regular, structured walking program on echocardiographic and performance parameters in patients with chronic heart failure (CHF). Twenty-one male and female patients, with a mean age of 61 years and a mean ejection fraction of 25%, performed a supervised, 4-month walking program. The patients walked an average of 60 min at 60% of the individual's peak oxygen consumption on 5 days per week. The walking program increased the distance walked during the 6-minute walk test ($P = 0.007$), improved echocardiographic parameters of systolic and diastolic function ($P < 0.05$). This study shows that a moderate, well-supervised walking program improves functional class, exertional capacity, and echocardiographic parameters of systolic and diastolic function in CHF patients.Q: Problems with VS2013 deployment project I'm using VS2013 Professional and the newest build of the.NET framework and various

This study was conducted to examine the effect of a resistance exercise program on oxidative stress in rats with type 2 diabetes mellitus. The rats were randomly assigned to one of four groups: an untrained diabetes mellitus (DM) group, a DM resistance exercise (DMRE) group, an untrained control (Con) group and a Con resistance exercise (ConRE) group. The diabetes group received 55 mg/dl of streptozotocin dissolved in citrate buffer, while the Con and ConRE groups received a citrate buffer solution. The exercise groups performed treadmill exercise at 3 days per week for 28 days. The results showed that the DMRE rats had higher levels of glycaemia, insulin, and homeostasis model assessment index than the ConRE and DM rats. The blood urea nitrogen, creatinine and uric acid levels were higher in the DMRE group than the other groups. The Con group had higher levels of low-density lipoprotein cholesterol than the ConRE group. Malondialdehyde, hydrogen peroxide and low-density lipoprotein cholesterol levels were higher in the DMRE group than in the DM group. The ConRE group had lower hydrogen peroxide levels than the Con group. These findings suggest that a regular resistance exercise program reduces the oxidative stress and favors a positive effect on lipid metabolism and kidney function in diabetes mellitus.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a substrate for a magnetic record medium used for a high-density magnetic recording. More particularly, the present invention relates to a substrate for a magnetic record medium having high durability.
