City officials in the capital, Jaipur, now say that the boy was trying to get a gun to start a war by giving his name to the local police as a terrorist. The little boy was arrested in April, and is currently being held at Jaipur Central Jail. One of the officials in Jaipur said that police in the state capital found a gun while searching the boy's home. "The boy's parents had submitted a complaint about an intruder at their residence while the boy was asleep. The police found the firearm in his house," the officer said. It seems that the boy was planning to use the gun to start a war between the US and Russia, the world's two largest economies. "The boy's father gave him the gun and asked him to give a message to the Russian authorities that they should be beaten," the official said. In the complaint, the mother wrote, "The boy is always making trouble with his friends and he breaks things. He's also always sad and cries

To understand the transfection efficiency of silica nanoparticles in comparison to some commercially available lipofection reagents, we prepared silica nanoparticles with diameters of 50 to 200 nm by a sol-gel process, and investigated the transfection efficiency of these silica nanoparticles into mouse fibroblast cells. We compared the transfection efficiency of silica nanoparticles with the transfection efficiencies of LipofectAMINE (LP), LPEI (Poly-L-Lysine Ethylenediamine), and DOTAP (1,2-dioleoyl-3-trimethylammonium-propane). The transfection efficiency of silica nanoparticles was dependent on both the size and surface charge of silica nanoparticles. The positive surface charge and the large particle size of silica nanoparticles increased the transfection efficiency of these particles in comparison with LP, LPEI, and DOTAP. We also found that the ratio of the negatively charged effector cation to the positively charged effector cation was important for the transfection efficiency of the silica nanoparticles. In particular, a high ratio of the negatively charged effector cation increased the transfection efficiency of the silica nanoparticles. These results suggest that the silica nanoparticles are potentially a useful non-viral transfection reagent for gene transfection. Every year, through its program "Business Environment Survey," Cushman & Wakefield, the real estate services firm, asks about 1,000 business executives around the world how they rate the financial health of their companies. Among them are the chief executive officers of the largest companies in their home countries; the chiefs of the largest corporations in the world, both publicly and privately held; and the chief executives of the biggest firms in the 35 countries that make up the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development. Yet when it comes to the 79a2804d6b
