Let's say I have this code for a one-to-one relationship: User should be a UserProfile. A UserProfile is related to a user (one-to-one). UserRepository.cs // get user var user = userRepo.FindBy(userId); var userId = user.Id; var profileId = user.UserId; // update user var oldUser = db.Users.Find(userId); oldUser.UserId = profileId; oldUser.UserName = user.UserName; oldUser.UserLogin = user.UserLogin; oldUser.UserMail = user.UserMail; oldUser.IsActive = user.IsActive; // update user db.Users.ApplyChanges(oldUser); So I'm changing the values of the oldUser object and saving it to the database. The problem is, when I'm re-querying the db to get the changed object, the new UserId is always equal 0, even though I changed it in the database and it's being saved correctly. In the database, there are 5 rows that refer to UserProfile, 4 of which have UserId = 0 Is there anything wrong with my code or am I missing some concept here? A: It does not look like you are using relationship mappings: [InverseProperty("User")] public class UserProfile { //include your primary key [Key] public int Id { get; set; } } [Owned] public class User { //get the UserProfile that relates
